The Patiala Peg is immortalized by Maharaja Bhupinder Singh, the ruler of the princely state of Patiala, in Punjab (North-western India).

A flamboyant king, with a penchant for luxury, he commissioned Cartier to create the famous 'Patiala Necklace' weighing 234.65 carats for him in 1928.

An avid polo player, his team comprised the formidable warriors of the Punjab that had never lost a match. Legend has it that the Maharaja invited an Irish team called the 'Viceroy's Pride' for a game of tent pegging, where players on horseback had to pierce and extricate wooden plates or pegs embedded in the ground.

On the eve of the tournament the Irish players were entertained by the Maharaja late into the night and were served double measures of whiskey. While they drank, the Maharaja's soldiers, fearful of his wrath if they lost the match, replaced the pegs to be used for the competition the next day with smaller sized ones for the visitors and bigger ones for themselves.

The Irish team, already inebriated from the night before, struggled to lift the smaller pegs and lost the match. When the outraged Captain complained, The Maharaja is said to have famously replied "In Patiala, our pegs are larger."

In Honor of the patiala peg our standard measure is 45 ml.
